North Pole

Dear _____,

It's a busy week at the North Pole. The workshop smells like pine shavings and cocoa, and the elves have sung the same song four days in a row. I've asked them to learn a second one.

Your name came up at our meeting on Tuesday. Marigold, the elf who keeps the Nice List, read out what she'd written: you _____.

Everyone clapped, and Bramble the reindeer stomped so hard that a candle fell over. The candle is fine.

I know about your wish, too: _____. Every wish goes into the big book, and the elves read every page. That's all I can say. Workshop rules.

Here's a North Pole secret you can keep: reindeer can't fly backward, so I always land facing the front of the house. I've checked the map, and _____ has good roofs for landing.

Until Christmas, keep being kind, even on grumpy days. Everybody has those. I had one last Thursday, when I lost my left boot.

On Christmas Eve, go to bed on time. The sleigh only stops at houses where everyone is asleep.

Your friend at the North Pole,

Santa Claus

P.S. I found the boot. Bramble was sleeping on it.
